ONE IS NOT BORN A WOMAN

Simone de Beauvoir

INTRODUCTION

by Jennifer Hansen

Simone (Lucie Ernestine Marie Bertrand) de Beauvoir was born in Paris on January 9, 1908, and died in Paris on April 14, 1986, spending her entire life in the neighborhood of Montparnasse. Beauvoir’s philosophical and feminist contributions are some of the most profound of the twentieth century, and many of the other women in this collection labor in her debt. Beauvoir grew up in a bourgeois family of a devout Catholic mother, Françoise de Beauvoir, and an agnostic father, Georges de Beauvoir, a lawyer and amateur actor who introduced her to literature at an early age. After World War I, the Beauvoir family lost some of its wealth and the young Simone watched her mother toil to maintain their household in what seemed to be tedious and repetitive work. Such perceptions about the role of mothers left her quite delighted to pursue a teaching career once her parents informed her that they would not be able to supply her with a dowry for a good marriage.
