Title:
SPECIAL SESSION: Achieving the Sustainable Development Goals by Supporting Healthy Work Environments During the COVID Pandemic

Keywords:
COVID-19, Healthy Work Environment and Sustainable Development Goals

Summary:
Healthy work environments are fundamental to achieving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). The purpose of this presentation is to describe the relationship between healthy work environments and the SDGs, particularly during COVID-19. Presenters will share examples of the nurse’s role in translating global goals into local actions in the workplace.

References:

Organizer
Valerie Ann Clary-Muronda, PhD, RNC-OB
Thomas Jefferson University
College of Nursing
Assistant Professor
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
USA

Author Summary: Valerie Clary Muronda Nursing is an assistant professor at Thomas Jefferson University College of Nursing, in Philadelphia, PA. Her current research interests include simulation-based inter-professional education, particularly in the area of neonatal resuscitation, and neonatal resuscitation training in limited resource settings.
Janice E. Hawkins is a Clinical Assistant Professor at Old Dominion University where she serves as director of community and global health initiatives and teaches in both the undergraduate and graduate programs. She currently serves as a Sigma Theta Tau International United Nations Liaison.