NURSING

The Working with traditional approaches and research arising from innovative non-traditional approaches are invited. Abstracts of completed or continuing research and range of topics including education, nursing practice, related papers are invited for consideration from a wide horizon that nursing research brings about and the transformation that follows the integration of research into practice.

The theme of this congress directs attention to the new horizons that nursing research brings about and the submission that follows the integration of research into practice. In interpreting the theme, the organizers wish to encourage nurses who are exploring new approaches to understanding nursing phenomena and how these inform practice, research and education. In this congress the "new world" of emerging paradigms will be aligned with those identified as traditional. The five sub-themes are guides and should be considered when submitting abstracts. The themes are:

- braving new approaches to nursing research and nursing knowledge development
- ethical, historical and philosophical inquiry
- critical issues facing the nursing profession
- global health issues challenging nurses
- clinically based research and nursing care outcomes.

OBJECTIVES

Through the process of interaction and critical appraisal participants will:

- gain a new awareness of the personal and professional possibilities created out of nursing research.
- develop a sense of international collegiality with nurses from a variety of contexts.
- be creative in developing nursing research methods congruent with the values underpinning nursing practice.
- facilitate a sense of international nursing practice through scholarship, education and research.

ABSTRACT DEADLINE: NOVEMBER 30, 1993

Send 6 copies of abstracts with a cover sheet indicating whether the abstract is being submitted for oral paper presentation, symposium or poster. Three copies of the abstracts are to contain author’s name and affiliation; three copies do not.
